The Woodford County Claggetts went to Missouri in two groups. Two brothers, Thomas and William, and one sister, Sarah, went directly into Missouri. Two brothers, Benjamin Mason and Charles, with the other sister Margaret, started from Todd County three years later in company with the Irvine family. Charles, now married to Mary Irvine, and Benjamin, after visiting Robert Irvine, went north to see their brothers and sister. They found the country settling up fast and that the slave question was disturbing. They decided to go to Clay County in the extreme west, where they had friends and relatives. Here Benjamin married Elizabeth Irvine, April 17, 1834.

Soon after they reached Clay County they heard of new lands to the north. They followed the trapper and hunter into Gentry County, where Mary Margaret, daughter of Charles and Mary Claggett, and the son of Benjamin and Elizabeth, had the distinction of being the first white children born in the county in the year of 1835.

From 1835 to the present year 1940 the narrative of the Claggett family is closely interwoven with that of the Irvines.
Reminiscences of Irvine Woodford Claggett
Missouri to Oregon

As told to Edith Kerns Chambers in 1927.

MY father, Benjamin Mason Claggett, enlisted twice for service in the Mexican War. He enlisted first on January 12, 1847, in Liberty, Missouri, as a private in Company H, Third Missouri Mounted Volunteers; and the second time at Athens (now Albany), county seat of Gentry County, September 22, 1847, under Captain Summers, Colonel Bonifham's regiment, commissary department. He was discharged at Fort Leavenworth.

On his return from first enlistment father sold his home in Gentry County and bought Mr. Plymate's improved farm in Harrison County. To this farm he added 80 acres bought with his soldier's rights. We were just nicely settled in this new home when we heard the folks in Gentry County were talking of going to Oregon. Father made a trip to his old home and after hearing of the wonders of that far off land returned and hastily sold our belongings and joined the rest of the family in the spring of 1852.

We stopped at Liberty, to visit an uncle, Samuel Hadley, who was a prominent man living in what seemed luxury to us. He was sheriff of his county. After this short visit we left for Saint Joseph to complete our equipment.

Our train was small. The unit was made up of the Irvine-Claggett-Berry families, all related. The most serious difficulty we encountered was crossing the Platte River. It was not only too expensive but caused delay to use the poor ferry. In fording the river we would often have to camp an extra night, for toward nightfall the river would rise and the quick-sand would make the crossing dangerous.

The Indians were friendly for the most part. Our troubles came as we neared the Blue Mountains. Frank Berry, standing guard one night, shot an Indian who was prowling around the camp. In retaliation the Indians drove off several of our horses and cattle.

Near the Snake River, five head were bought back at $5.00 apiece, after we had spent three days hunting for them. One time an old Indian made a dash at the children saying, “Charge George Washington”.

We did not have much serious sickness. A young man, one of Uncle Robert’s drivers, died soon after crossing the Platte river. Uncle Robert Irvine lost a child mid-way across the plains and his wife died after they left The Dalles.

Recollections of Elizabeth Claggett Kerns

Crossing the Plains in 1852

"As Told to Edith Kerns Chambers in 1929."

WHEN the stories of the new west penetrated the little settlement in Gentry County, Missouri, Grandmother was as interested as her sons and daughters. We were living in our new home in Harrison County when we heard that the folks in Gentry County were planning to go to Oregon. We hastily disposed of our farm and surplus stock and joined them in March, 1852. Grandmother was still enthusiastic about making the trip with us.

On April first we started on that six months’ journey. Robert Irvine, my uncle, served as captain of our train and was relieved by his brother Samuel and his brother-in-law, Charles Claggett. Robert Irvine and Charles Claggett had the best equipment. We had two yoke of oxen, and some loose cattle. I have often heard my mother say she walked two-thirds of the way to Oregon, often helping with the cattle. She carried through life a deep scar on her forehead from stampeding cattle.

We stopped near Liberty, Missouri, where we saw others making preparations for the westward journey. Our grandmother had a brother, Samuel Hadley, living in Clay County. He was a prominent man in his community and lived in luxury with many slaves. We enjoyed our stay there and considered it a "lark" to sleep in high poster beds.

The first exciting event of the trip was one of the crossings of the Platte River. After two or three trips were made across with trusty oxen we would have to find another crossing because of quicksand. Toward evening the river came up, and as we were the last ones to cross we nearly lost our goods. I shall never forget how my mother worked that evening drying our bedding and clothes. She seemed much distressed that the Bible was so soaked that the leaves were in danger of being lost.

Somewhere, perhaps half way across the plains, Uncle Charles Claggett’s team ran into ours and broke the rear wheels. We traveled a great distance in the two-wheeled cart constructed from our four-wheeled wagon. Our wagons carried, besides the children, our food, beds, clothing, and camp equipment. In our wagon the food boxes, covered with quilts, were used as seats. Two Dutch ovens swung under the wagon, and two split bottom chairs were fastened to the back.

In the beginning of our trip we could buy dried apples, salmon, and flour at the trading posts and from the Indians. The Indians would say "Swap salmon for powder". As we neared the end of the journey we were two days without bread. My mother often told how she stayed away from us children so as not to hear us ask for bread.

Our train was small when we started out, but from time to time a wagon would join us. The wagons formed a circle at night and each family built its own fire and prepared its own food. Beds were made on the ground with the aid of ticks filled with feathers, but after the loss of the two wheels and one yoke of oxen it was necessary to discard feather beds; and when we lost our third ox, more articles were abandoned.

The only time there might have been serious trouble with the Indians occurred near the end of the journey. The train descended from the plateau into the valley of the Snake River. The wagons were taking their places in the circle and ours was the last to draw up. Father had gone to confer with the men as to who should stand guard. Mother was starting a fire when two Indian chiefs in all their paint came galloping up to our wagon. I was so fascinated with their colorful approach that they were at the end of the wagon before I realized my danger. With one loud whoop the rider nearest the wagon made a grab for me. I darted to the front only to find that the rider had whirled and was there to make his second attempt. Just at this time Father observed what was taking place and ran with his black-snake in his hand. I am sure that the Indian and I never forgot the sound of that whip as it struck the flank of the horse. Fortunately for us a long train appeared over the hill and the Indians did not dare to attack us. It was later estimated that several hundred Indians were on the war path. As it was, the two trains lost several head of cattle and horses that night.

At The Dalles came the first break in our train. The men who were not needed to take the stock and wagons overland remained at the post a few days. They constructed rafts and floated down the Columbia to the Cascade Falls. Here were stationed men who were hired to take them around the Falls. They took passage on a large scow. After four days of travel they were joined by the rest of the train at the mouth of the Sandy.

It was a sad parting at The Dalles. Father and Mother were compelled to remain for sometime at the post to earn enough money to go on. I shall never forget the tears shed by my mother as she said goodbye to her mother. This was the last time we ever saw Grandmother Hadley. Margaret Hadley Irvine died the night the family arrived at their destination, Salem, Oregon. At last, after that long journey of six months, she rested in the Mission Cemetery, the first one buried there.

Early Days in Multnomah County, Oregon

OUR family remained in The Dalles for three weeks in order to secure enough money to finish the journey by boat. Father took up his trade of blacksmith and mother made and sold apple pies at one dollar a pie. In three weeks they had enough money to continue our journey.

The ride was interesting and pleasant after six months in an ox-pulled vehicle. The most impressive incident was the free dinner served on the boat, under the direction of J. C. Ainsworth. My mother forbade us to push or crowd as we saw others doing. These people ate as if they were starved.

It was late in the afternoon when we reached Portland. We remained on the wharf while father went in search of a house and a conveyance. It seemed a long wait, sitting on our rolls and bags. Finally father came with a drayman. The dray was a one-horse affair with two wheels. Our things were loaded on and mother, brother James, and I were put on top. We drove along Front street with its ungraded road, its one and two-story frame buildings, and here and there a piece of sidewalk, for about half a mile to a one-room cabin owned by Finis Carruthers.

This cabin was in a forest and about 600 feet from a larger cabin where Finis and his mother lived. The cabin was built of logs and covered with shakes. A fireplace was in one end, a small window on either side, and a door facing the east. The next morning father went in search of furniture, and provisions. Soon we had two bedsteads made of lumber and a trundle bed under each, a cupboard between, placed in one end of the room. The stove was placed near the fireplace, and a table under one of the windows.

Mrs. Carruthers was a typical pioneer woman, large of bone, spare, reticent, and careworn. She had great understanding for the needs of a pioneer family. From her we got milk, butter, cream, chickens, and eggs. She not only helped with provisions but gave the older members of the family work. The older boys soon secured work hauling wood at $2.00 a day. The older girls found employment where they might work and attend school. Father rented a room on Front street and set up a blacksmith shop in partnership with Mr. Middleton.

We arrived in Oregon just when the country was feeling the effects of the gold discoveries in California. So many men had gone to California that jobs were plentiful for the younger folks. At this time food was scarce and very high. I well remember father bringing home, in a paper bag, four apples for which he had paid more than a dollar apiece. How we children eyed those red apples hardly able to wait until they were carefully cut in two and distributed. I carried my half core in my pocket two or three days.

When summer came we found a four-room frame house nearer to father's work, about where the Auditorium now stands, and where we could go to school and church. Here we had a view of the river which always seemed full of boats: sail boats, steamboats, and rafts. Our neighbors were the Coffins, Reddicks, Carsons, and Casons. It was at the Cason home that I first saw a demonstration of spiritualism. My brother and I became curious about the rumors of what was being done at the home, so one evening we stole away and slipped into the house and took our place at the table. Here were about a dozen grown persons sitting around the dining-room table with their hands on top touching one another. Soon someone asked a question and the response came with one tap for yes, two for no, etc. In the dim candlelight the table began to dance around on one leg. This was too much for two frightened youngsters and we slipped out as quietly as we had entered.

We remained in this location until the next fall. In 1854 father took a contract for some work in Milwaukie and we spent the remainder of that year there, and until February of 1855. Then we went out to the donation land claim that father and mother had taken up in Clackamas and Multnomah Counties and commenced to build a new cabin just below the woodchoppers. There we had previously spent two summers. This new home was one of the best in that locality. A cabin of four rooms, two below and two above, with a lean-to for the kitchen, the only house with real lumber floors. The fireplace was large, built of plaster and sticks on the outside of the building. A dutch oven always stood beside the fireplace.

It was beside that fireplace, with a pine knot for illumination, that books were read by Daniel Talbot, the teacher, and by our parents; books borrowed from some kind neighbor. In the community someone each week would make the trip of two or three days to Portland. This was the opportunity to secure a few necessary articles, such as coffee, sugar, yarn, thread, and cloth. Oh, how eagerly we waited for the news they would bring of the outside world, often months old.

One day in 1855 a neighbor, George W. Brown, came hurriedly up the road to tell us the Indians were on the war path and he would be back in one-half hour to take the family into Portland. In a short time he was back with his ox-team. Mother, with us smaller children, bedding, and provisions were placed in the wagon. The older children followed on foot. Father at this time was in Portland doing some work.

We picked up Mrs. Brown and her two children. We stopped for the Roorks and a little farther on for Jim Brown’s family. Mr. and Mrs. Brown marched ahead of the wagon, each with a rifle on their shoulder. Just out of Portland we met father coming for us. We drove to Father Kelley’s where we found many others had preceded us.

The Kelly home was a large imposing house to me. It was a two-story log house about two miles from the river. A long hall ran thru the house with two rooms on either side. The front rooms each had a fireplace. When we arrived, the men were assembled outside of the house planning what to do if the Indians should come that way. It was the opinion of the men that the women and children in case of attack should be put on Ross Island. In the house the women were busy arranging places for all to sleep. Here were the Kerns, Newell, and Abraham families, whom I was to know so well in the future.

The next morning the crowd began to scatter; we, later going to Portland where we remained until the summer when we moved to the farm for our home. Father set up his blacksmith shop near Boring. From that time on father hardly saw a well day until his death, February, 1859.

I attended school (’56-’63) at Powell Valley. Mrs. J. D. Lee (Eliza Whitten), Mrs. Austin (Effie Morgan), and Mr. Summer were some of the teachers. In 1863 and 1864 I attended the Portland Academy, boarding with Jennie Kerns Williamson. In 1865 and 1866, I boarded with Father Kelly and attended school with the Kelly girls and their cousin, Jane. I taught at Boring three months and at Gresham six months. Then we moved to Portland where I had a private school until I was married in 1868. We were married at the home of Samuel’s father, William Kerns, by the Reverend George Atkinson. Then we went to our own home near Lone Fir Cemetery, Portland.

"CHARLES S. CLAGGETT. During his active agricultural life Charles S. Claggett was known as a good business man and shrewd manager, and he favorably impressed all who knew him during his residence in Multnomah county.
A native of the state of Missouri, he was born February 5, 1835, and was reared on the paternal farm, at the same time attending the nearby school. The family fortunes were shifted to the west in 1852, in which year Benjamin Claggett, the father of Charles S., and his wife Elizabeth, determined to seek the larger possibilities of the west, and after a year spent in California they came to Oregon. Here they took up a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres, upon which Charles S. lived with the rest of the family, contributing his share toward the general support. Mrs. Claggett now resides on a portion of the original claim.
From his new home in Oregon, Mr. Claggett returned east in 1879 to marry Phebe A. Stephens, a native of the vicinity of Paris, Champaign county, Ohio, and daughter of Joseph and Catherine Stephens, the latter of whom were engaged in general farming, stock-raising and a mercantile enterprise. Mr. Stephens spent his entire life in Ohio, where he died in 1897. Mrs. Stephens passed away in 1886. Together Mr. Claggett and his wife traveled back to Oregon, and continued to reside on the sixty-five acres left from the original claim of three hundred and twenty acres up to the time of his death in 1899. Of this tract, about thirty-five acres are cleared, and general farming and stock-raising are engaged in.
Mr. Claggett was a Republican in political preference, and while active at times, confined his political services to the office of school director for many years. Mrs. Claggett and her daughter, Elizabeth, are members of the Baptist Church, to the support of which Mr. Claggett had contributed liberally. He was honored and respected by all who knew him." PORTLAND'S EARLY HISTORY RECALLED BY OREGON PIONEER

Irvine Claggett, of Independence, Trades Ox Team for Land Lying Between East Stark Street and Holladay Avenue.

To an ox-team for the land that lies between East Stark street and Holladay avenue, and extending from Grand avenue to the Willamette River was one of the boyhood experiences of Irvine Claggett, who is in Portland in connection with settlement of the Caruthers estate.

Locations were desired to determine certain points in the contested Caruthers property rights under legal proceedings. Mr. Claggett designated the spot where his father made his first home on coming to Portland in 1842. It was in the Caruthers donation land claim. The father, Benjamin Claggett, rented the entire 640 acres, extending from the site of the old state penitentiary (now the Smith & Watson Iron Works) one mile south along the Willamette, and from the river back to what is now Terwilliger boulevard. Caruthers was not the original owner, but paid about $1.15 per acre for the land, according to the recollection of Irvine Claggett.

The family of Benjamin Claggett entered on the premises in the Spring of 1855, and the father did much of the iron work and blacksmithing at the penitentiary.

Road Improvements Recalled.

Later a man named Ross who had a livery stable on Morrison, near Third, and a Mr. Jacobs, who owned a wagon shop, induced Benjamin Claggett to operate a blacksmith shop in their locality. This was at the edge of the settlement as it then existed, and about where Ben Selling's store is situated. The road from the river ran west to the hills, and it was along this road that much of their patronage came.

In 1854 the elder Claggett took up a donation land claim, half a section, above the present town of Graham, and where Pleasant Home station now stands.

Irvine Claggett became the owner of an ox-team and wagon, and was engaged in various enterprises when a man striping. He hauled gravel for the improvement of Front and First streets, bringing it by ferry from the pintail point in the St. Helen.

He relates how one man objected to having the "excessive improvement" made, with the result that Claggett secured some log of considerable size and placed a corduroy road in front of the objector's premises.

Ox-Team Traded for Land.

At this time a man named Caruthers, but of a different family, not related to the South Portland Caruthers, offered to trade the land from Holladay's Addition south to the Stark street road for the ox-team. Young Claggett could not accept the offer being under age. He tried to get someone to act for him until he came of age, but was not successful and the deal fell through. He later planned to take up a claim known as Marquam Hill, but was too young to file. The property involved in the ox-team trade is now known as Wheeler's Addition.

The family lived for 12 years on the Pleasant Home farm. Irvine married and later moved to Jacksonville for his wife's health, and then to Douglas County. In 1882 he settled at Independence, Polk County, and has lived there nearly 61 years. Independence was then a grain-growing center and all was shipped to Portland by boat.

He operated the ferry, opened a warehouse, bought and sold grain and merchandise. Schools were needed, as there were only three months of school in the year for such as were established. Districts were consolidated and teachers employed, among them Judge Martin L. Pipes, now of Portland.

Independence Put on Map.

A charter was framed for the town of Independence and city government established. In the school work W. P. Conway, now of Woodburn, aided in the plans. Getting the town started in its legal aspect, Mr. Claggett had the aid of a man named McCord, who later went to Eastern Oregon. He took a hand in securing churches. The Southern Methodist Church was the first established.

Mr. Claggett is a live citizen right now. He is 77 years old and going strong. His reminiscences are most interesting. Coming across the plains, in 1844, his party came direct to Portland over the old Oregon trail from Missouri, where he was born in 1841. His parents were from Kentucky, their home having been situated three miles from Lexington.

Vigilant speaks in his manner and he is keenly alert and interested in the things of today. Mrs. Claggett, who was threatened with pulmonary trouble in early life, is still in good health and bears witness to the longevity of Oregon pioneers, the men and women who made the beginnings of Portland and the state.

[Oregonian, Portland, Oregon, Sunday, May 12, 1918 p.9]
Of old-timers in and about Independence Missouri, as written by Fred Lockley, who is a descendant of the original pioneers of that part of the United States, and incidentally, incidents connected with "Dad Caggrett and old-time Independence.

Independence, Oregon, is named for the Independence of Missouri. The town was founded by A. A. Thorpe, a few days after the 4th of July in 1851. He and his wife settled in Independence, and they opened a store. They had seven children, one of whom was my grandmother. She was born in Kentucky. They had eight children. I am the middle one. I was married in 1865 to Nancy Brown. If you come up to the house my wife, whose memory is good, can tell you all about our marriage and our four children. We have lived in Independence since 1867, nearly 60 years. Do you see this cane I am walking with? The handle is a hand-clasping a hammer. The wood from which the cane came from the Merriman, and the hammer was carved from wood from the Monitor. Sam Irvine here, is also an old-timer. Ask him about the old days. His father was any my mother's brother.

I crossed the plains the same year that my cousin, "Dad" Caggrett, came to Oregon, said Samuel B. Irving. "My father and the father of B. F. Irvine, editor of The Journal, were brothers. Their sisters were the mother of Milton A. Miller, United States Senator Charles L. McVay is a grandson of another sister. I was born in Gentry county, Missouri, November 26, 1840. I left Missouri in the spring of 1862. We had two wagons, each drawn by four yoke of cattle. We also had 75 head of loose cattle, a riding horse and a mule. There were a wagon in our train. That year was a bad one for sickness. We had right smart of cholera in our train. We reached Salem October 14th and took up a donation land claim seven miles south of Salem. Father built a log house and barn for a floor. We had one window, which was left open when we were on the road, and when it was raining mother fastened up an oil cloth. Father traded his mules for a 50-dollar gold slug, for he was pretty well out of money when we got here. We picked moss from the oak trees to use instead of straw in the ticks for our beds. That winter there was no feed for the cattle, so father cut willows and small trees so they could browse on. Father bought some stock at $5 a hundred, which mother used for making bread.

"Nowadays they hire a bus to go around and gather up the children to take them to school. When I was a boy I walked three miles to Liberty and back each day during the three months of the term. My father died in 1860. There were eight children of us. After his death the family scattered. My mother married John Emmett, who had a farm near Zenia in Polk county. I was about 14, so I struck out for myself and landed a job slashing and burning brush. Then I moved in the Fringe neighborhood. He agreed to pay me five dollars and 25 cents per month. I worked for him six months and then tackled another man for my pay. He gave me five dollars and 25 cents, but he didn't let me have it. I guess he never gave any money for that, so I won't ever got, for that's all I ever got. I left the Fringe neighborhood and went to work for Israel Woods near Buena Vista, helping to clear his land. He was a fine old man and treated me as if I had been his own boy. I worked for him a year and a half.

"When I was 21 years old—in the summer of 1854—I went up to Seattle. Van Duyan Smith ran the store there. Then I think there must have been between 200 and 300 people in or about Seattle. I worked for a while in a butcher shop. Then I got a job as a clerk in the shoe store and also worked for the city. In the fall of 1855 I came to Independence and have lived here ever since. In 1871 I was married to Elizabeth Johnson. We have five children—four girls and a boy.

"Dad" Caggrett is the only one now living in Independence who was here when I came, 55 years ago. I ran a butcher shop here 15 years, after which I ran a farm many years. One of my best friends in the early days was Rob Roy McGregor of Parrish. They called him 'Little Bob.' He ran a harness shop. He is the author of a book called 'Echoes of the Valley,' and of a large number of patriotic songs. Of the eight children in our family only three are now living. My brother J. F. Irvine is in the grocery business in East Portland. My sister Mattie, who married John Ford, lives at Dallas.

"My father, Samuel Hadley Irvine, was born in Kentucky, and my mother, whose maiden name was Spicey Dun- can, was born in Tennessee. If you will go and see F. A. Patterson he can tell you a lot about the early days here. He is 80 years old. His son, Ike Pat- terson, is running for governor. Another man who can tell you a lot about early days here is D. L. Hedges. Thomas Jefferson Fryer is also an older-timer here."

I found D. L. Hedges in his flower garden. As we sat on the steps of the side porch Mr. Hedges said, "I have lived in Oregon 15 years. I was 15 when we crossed the plains, in 1851. I was born in Ohio, February 25, 38 years ago. My father, Israel Hedges, was a blacksmith. He ran the first blacksmith shop in Independence. He took up a donation land claim a mile and a half from here. In 1859, when I was 15, I was married to Amanda Jane Fudge. All four of our children are still living. Some time if you will drop in and spend the evening with me, I will tell you a lot about having to eat horse meat for seven days or go hungry. That was in the Indian war of 1858-55. I was serving under Captain B. F. Burch, up in the Yakima country."

When I visited T. J. Fryer I found him digging in his garden. "No, of course I'm not too old to do hard work," he answered. "A man ought to get up, eat a sweet every day. People need to exercise just as much as they need to eat or sleep. I came to Oregon more than 80 years ago. I was born in Cooper county, Missouri, December 16, 1841. We landed in Oregon City after an eight months' trip across the plains, in December, 1845. My father ran a hotel, the Oregon house, at Oregon City seven years. We moved to Polk county in 1851, and I have lived here ever since. I served under Captain Charles LeFollette in the First Oregon Volunteers."
COUPLE HONOR WEDDING

GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATED AT INDEPENDENCE.

Mr. and Mrs. J. I. Claggett, Parents of Portland Man, Enjoy Christmas in Unusual Manner.

INDEPENDENCE, Or., Dec. 27.—(Special.)—Mr. and Mrs. J. I. Claggett, of this place, have just celebrated the golden anniversary of their marriage on Christmas day. They were married in Portland on December 25, 1859, going shortly afterward to where Gresham now stands, and in 1866 came to Independence, where they have resided since.

Mr. Claggett was born in Missouri in 1841, and in 1852 crossed the plains to Oregon. Mrs. Claggett, also born in Missouri, followed in 1859.

In 1854 Mr. Claggett worked for a time on The Oregonian, then owned and managed by T. J. Dryer.

They have three children living, one boy having died in infancy. Their son, George Claggett, lives in Portland, and Mrs. Young, a daughter, in Southern Oregon. The other daughter, Mrs. Wells, lives in San Francisco and is an artist of prominence. All the children, as also a granddaughter, Miss Claggett, of Portland, were at the anniversary celebration.

A large gathering of friends and relatives were present at the celebration.
FRIENDS ATTEND RECEPTION FOR INDEPENDENCE COUPLE

Mr. and Mrs. Irvine Claggett, Pioneers, Make First Trip to Portland in 23 Years; Early Days in District Recalled.

A GROUP of old friends and pioneers gathered yesterday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. O. W. Hosford at a reception for Mr. and Mrs. Irvine Claggett of Independence, both pioneers, who came to Oregon via the covered wagon route. Mrs. Claggett is nearly 80 years old, and Mr. Claggett is 87. Mrs. Hosford is their only grandchild.

Assisting at the reception was Mrs. Sarah Young, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Claggett. Mrs. J. C. Klucker, who also assisted, is the wife of their son and the mother of Mrs. Hosford.

The trading of a team of oxen for a half section of land on the east side is the fond recollection of Mr. Claggett. That was at a time when he was 16 years old, and it was, incidentally, his first deal in real estate.

The trade was perfectly good, but a man happened to see standing by at the time and taking advantage of the fact that Mr. Claggett was too young to consummate the trade, jumped the property. At another time Mr. Claggett engineered an ingenious real estate transaction. A certain person wanted a large order of firewood. Mr. Claggett said he would fill the order and paid a man if he could have the wood on his place. The reply said he could if he would buy the land. So Mr. Claggett allowed a group of men to live on the land for their service of cutting the wood on it.

This wood he sold to the one who desired it, and from the proceeds purchased the land. His father, however, decided he was still a bit young for speculation and sold the lot for him at $25 apiece.

When Mr. Claggett arrived in Portland in 1853, the east side of Portland was an almost unexplored part of the forest. Indeed, when Mrs. Claggett came to the city in 1853, the only building on the east side of the river was a saloon near the landing place for the ferry.

Our Operate Ferry.

Speaking of the ferry, it was operated by oars when Mr. Claggett first arrived. Later, however, someone conceived the employment of mule power. Side wheels were constructed on the ferry and a mule t,read on each, making possible a much more satisfactory locomotion than had the oars. The only difficulty was that one of the mules was quite stubborn, and when in mid-channel refused to work at times. Frudgins only served to make him kick, with frequent damage to the side wheels.

Mr. and Mrs. Claggett were married at the home his father had established in Powell valley. That was in 1852. After their marriage they moved to a place near Gram, in 1888 they went to southern Oregon, as far south as Jacksonville. They came to Independence in 1867 and have resided there since.

Hundredth Birthday
Date to be Observed

Independence—On New Year's day, Mrs. Nancy Claggett, wife of the late Jesse Irvine Claggett, a pioneer of 1859, will celebrate her 100th birthday anniversary at her home in Powell Valley, where they were later married at the Claggett home in 1859, soon after her arrival. They lived on a farm near where Gresham now stands, and later in 1866 drove by wagon and team south through Oregon to Jackson- ville, looking for a homestead. In 1867 they came to Independence where Claggett was engaged in busi- ness, hardware merchant, grain merchant and warehouseman.

The Independence ferry has been named "Claggett" after these early pioneers, as they related instances in the early history of the ferry service at Independence, Claggett operating it with oars and later with a mule and horses.

Mrs. Claggett has occupied the present home for about 68 years, and it is in splendid state of preserva- tion today typifying the excellent workmanship of the builder and the materials used in its construction.

A son, George Claggett, lives in Portland and makes frequent visits to his mother's side, also a daugh- ter, Mrs. R. P. Wells, in San Francisco, who expected to be here for her mother's birthday, but was de- tained on account of her husband's illness.

Mrs. Claggett recalls vividly the flood of 1881 and these stormy days are not unlike those of that period. They went through many floods since that time, often suffering many losses to warehouse property on the river front.

She has been a member of the Cloverleaf Rebekah lodge which was instituted in 1893 in Independence and of which she was a charter member. She is also a member of the Presbyterian church, and at- tended regularly as long as her strength would permit.
Polk Pioneer
Woman Taken After Century

Independence—Mrs. J. I. (Nancy) Claggett, who passed the century mark last January 1, died in Portland Wednesday, and the remains were brought to Independence where funeral services will be Saturday.

Her life was begun near Knoxville, Mo., January 4, 1838, her maiden name being Nancy Brown. She became the wife of James Irvine Claggett in December of 1859 after coming to Oregon the same year. The Claggett family came to Oregon the year before. They were married near Powell Valley about one and one-half miles east of what is now Gresham.

They came to Independence in 1867 where Claggett went into the grain warehouse business, founding this city as a shipping center. That was the age of riverboats and warehouses on the waterfront along the Willamette river. Claggett acted as agent for the riverboats and later he entered the mercantile business.

He died April 17, 1929, at the age of 91. The Ferry at Independence was named in his honor.

Mrs. Claggett celebrated her 100th anniversary last New Year's at her home here, surrounded by her family and a host of friends. Her health has been quiet poor for the past few years and she has had to have constant care and attention. She was taken to Portland this spring to be near other members of her family.

Her daughter, Mrs. Sarah Young, with whom she has made her home in Independence for many years, accompanied her to Portland. A son, George Claggett, and a niece, Mrs. Olin Hosford, live in Portland, and another daughter, Mrs. R. F. Wells, lives in San Francisco, Calif.

She was a member of the Presbyterian church and attended faithfully as long as her health permitted. She was a charter member of Cloverleaf Rebekah Lodge.

For over 70 years she lived in this community. She aided in an early day in bringing many a young life into the world, going about ministering to the sick, faithful to her friends and family to the end. Her beautiful life complete she rests with her forefathers.
