“One document in Robert Moore’s estate file was approved by James M. Moore as Justice of the Peace, signed 22 Aug. 1864. Maria M. Moore made her will on 2 Mar. 1880, identifying herself as the wife of James M. Moore of Oregon City. She left her interest in the donation land claim and in a saw mill adjacent to Oregon City to son-in-law George Pease in trust for son James L. Moore. James M. Moore was listed on the petition to probate filed 22 Nov. 1880 as age 73 residing in Oregon City. It should be noted that he gave 25 Aug. 1835 as his marriage date on land claim papers, but the database of Illinois marriages shows 1837.” [Nancy Prevost files]

BEALS—At the home of Mrs. S. A. Baldwin, 306 Lawrence street, Eugene, at eight o'clock Monday evening, September 3, 1906, Mrs. B. S. Beals, aged 87 years, nine months and 15 days.

Mrs. Beals was born at Martinburg, New Hampshire, December 18, 1818, and came to Oregon in 1852 by way of the isthmus of Panama. She has been identified with the pioneer history of the state of Oregon. In the party in which she came to the western land was Edward Baker, who became the first senator from Oregon, and who was one of the first to fall in the Civil war. Her husband was associated with Ben Holladay in the building of Oregon & California railroad, the present Southern Pacific line to the bay city, and her son, Edward Elliott is a prominent engineer.

Besides the son, whose wife was with Mrs. Beals at the time of her death, she is survived by two daughters, Mrs. E. A. Robins of Oakland, Cal., and Mrs. Jennie C. Jones of Seattle.

For the past four years Mrs. Beals has been making her home with Mrs. Baldwin in Eugene.

The body will be taken to Portland this afternoon for interment there.

EARLY LIFE THRILL FOR MRS. CRAWFORD

Troublesome Indian Days
Seen by Late Pioneer.

MANY HARDSHIPS BORNE

Robert Moore, Grandfather of Woman, Mentioned, in Account of Wilkes' Expedition.

Moore Chosen on Committee.

Robert Moore had been a member of the Peoria expedition of 1840. He was one of the few men whose eagerness to establish law and order and to secure the Oregon country as United States territory, led to the meeting at Champoege in 1843, after several years of effort and agitation. In the preliminary meeting of February 17, 1843, at the Methodist Mission in the Willamette valley, Robert Moore was one of the committee chosen to form a constitution and draft a code of laws. In the Champoege meeting of May 2, 1843, he was chosen chairman of the legislative committee, which was ordered to report on July 5 at Champoege, at which time the committee report was adopted as the organic law. Another participant at Champoege was Captain Medorem Crawford, who had crossed the plains in 1842 and taken up a donation claim in the Yamhill district.

PUGET SOUND BUREAU, Seattle, Dec. 5.—One of the most direct links between the Pacific northwest of the present day, well-populated and prosperous, and those days of the earliest settlement of "the Oregon country," was broken by the death in Seattle Monday of Mrs. Elizabeth Jane Crawford, wife of Ronald Crawford. Mrs. Crawford was 87 years old. Her husband, who survives her, is ten years her senior.

Mrs. Crawford's grandfather, Robert Moore, is mentioned in the account of Captain Wilkes' expedition to the falls of the Willamette in 1841. "A hardy pioneer from the United States, a Mr. Moore, had taken possession of the west side of the falls under purchase from an old Indian chief, and was speculating about the probability of the government recognizing his title, and the subject of pre-emption rights often formed the topic of conversation."

In 1847 Robert Moore was joined by his son James, who brought from Peoria his wife and little family. On April 1, 1852, Elizabeth Jane, eldest daughter of James Moore, was married to Ronald Crawford, brother of Captain Medorem Crawford. Ronald Crawford had come west as mounted escort of the immigrants of 1847. In the course of the ensuing 22 years in Oregon 14 children were born to James Moore and his wife, Martha (Miller) Moore. During the same period seven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Crawford, three of whom are still living. All members of the Moore and Crawford families took active part in the development of various portions of the Oregon country.

Couple Live in Clackamas.

For five years after their marriage in 1852 Mr. and Mrs. Crawford lived in Clackamas county. Then came a partnership in the building business with John L. Morrison, who built the first house in Portland and for whom Morrison street was named. Mr. Crawford next took part in the gold rush to Orofino, in Idaho, following which he took up a claim on Pataha creek, 50 miles east of Walla Walla, where Mrs. Crawford joined him in 1861.

The four years that followed filled Mrs. Crawford's mind with unforgettable and stirring memories. She was often entirely alone with her small children, while her husband brought freight from Fort Walla Walla to help other settlers get themselves established. On one occasion she sat by her fireside with the smallest child on her lap and others hiding their faces in her skirts, while the room filled up with taciturn Indians. She drew from its hiding place an old-fashioned pistol and held it as if showing it to the baby, but in readiness to fire if necessary. The Indians took the hint, and without a word they left.

Room Full of Indians.

At another time, as she sat in the same way with her children, Mr. Crawford, who happened to be at home, argued mildly with a roomful of Indians and tried to lessen their hostility by displaying a carbine, then new to the country. The Indians wished to see it loaded. Mr. Crawford loaded it and was showing the visitors how to cock it, when an Indian jogged his elbow and the carbine was discharged, the bullet missing the Indian chief by a hair's breadth. Mrs. Crawford thought their last moment had come, but the chief realized it was an accident and restrained his excited followers.

One day, in Mr. Crawford's absence, Mrs. Crawford hailed a friendly Indian and asked him what an old Indian had meant by breaking a clod of earth on her doorstep and departing without greeting her. The friendly Indian explained that this was a sign that their cabin was trespassing on the property of the Indians. He said he feared a massacre was being planned and that he and other friendly natives would not be strong enough to control the hostile Indians much longer. Mrs. Crawford kept her children indoors until her husband returned and then insisted on leaving the place at once.

The family then moved in to Walla Walla, where Mr. Crawford engaged in contracting and building and in freighting between that point and Wallula, until he was appointed deputy collector of internal revenue for Oregon. He held this position, living with his family in Salem, from 1865 to 1869. The Crawfords then moved to Olympia, where Mr. Crawford established a furniture factory at Tumwater with salesrooms in Olympia. Compelled by ill-health to give up this work, Mr. Crawford, in 1874, moved his family to a homestead in Lewis county, and later represented Lewis county in the Washington territorial legislature.

In 1877 Mr. and Mrs. Crawford made their last move, coming to Seattle, where they had been preceded by a year by their eldest son, Samuel Leroy Crawford. A pioneer newspaper man of the northwest, Samuel L. Crawford left the employ of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer in 1888 and with Charles T. Conover opened Seattle's first real estate office. The firm continues in business to this day, though Samuel Crawford died in 1916.

71st Wedding Day Celebrated.

In Seattle Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Crawford lived on Union street, between Sixth and Seventh avenues, at a time when that location was completely surrounded by the forests, and the heavily wooded grounds of the old state university lay between their home and the city. Here they remained until the university had been relocated in the far northern part of the city, the old site and all the neighborhood cleared and covered with great buildings. They had then to give way and go elsewhere in the city for the quiet home that they desired.

On April 1, 1923, Mr. and Mrs. Crawford, surrounded by many members of their immediate family and its collateral branches, celebrated the 71st anniversary of their marriage.

R. C. CRAWFORD BURIED

SIMPLE SERVICES MARK RITES FOR SEATTLE PIONEER.

Pioneer of 1847 and Resident of Seattle Since 1877 Is Laid to Rest in Lako View.

Less than three years short of the century mark, Ronald C. Crawford, who crossed the plains to Oregon territory in 1847, and who has resided in Seattle since 1877, died at his home in this city Saturday night and was buried in Lake View Cemetery yesterday after a simple service conducted by the Rev. Sidney Morgan. His widow, ten years his junior, had been laid to rest in the family plot only a few months before, after nearly seventy-two years of married life.

Mr. Crawford was born January 31, 1827, in Havana (now Montour Falls), Schuyler County, N. Y., second son of Samuel G. and Elizabeth (Davis) Crawford, and named Ronald Crawford in honor of a member of the family distinguished in Scottish history.

He was deputy collector of internal revenue for Oregon from 1865 to 1869, when he moved from Salem to Olympia. Compelled by ill-health to give up the furniture factory he had established at Tumwater, with salesroom in Olympia, in 1874 he took up a homestead in Lewis County and later represented the county in the Legislature. In 1876 he was appointed superintendent of the United States penitentiary on McNeil Island, continuing there eighteen months, when he moved to Seattle. He was engaged in a brokerage business in this city until 89 years old.

Of his seven children, Mr. Crawford is survived by three, Mrs. A. C. Warren and Mrs. L. S. Booth of this city, and Ronald M. Crawford of Olympia, all of whom attended the funeral service, at which the pallbearers were grandsons and great-grandsons. His eldest son, the late Samuel LeRoy Crawford, a resident of Seattle from 1876 for more than forty years, was Thomas W. Prosch's partner in the ownership of The Intelligencer when it was consolidated with The Post. In 1888, with C. T. Conover, he founded Crawford & Conover, a corporation still engaged in business in this city.

CAPTAIN PEASE, 88, DIES

PILOT PROMINENT IN COAST MARINE CIRCLES.

Flatboat Line to Oregon City Begun in 1850; Active Work Done in Channel Deepening.

Captain George A. Pease, for many years a prominent figure in Pacific Coast marine circles, died yesterday at the age of 88 years. Death came at the family home, 784 Pettigrove street.

Born in New York in 1830, Captain Pease, at the age of 19, left for California gold fields with 51 other young men. He came to Portland by way of Astoria in 1850. In December he started a flatboat line to Oregon City and for many years developed river navigation.

In the 90s, as pilot on several Government dredges, he was active in the work of deepening the river channel from Astoria to Portland. He was connected with the Oregon-Washington Navigation Company.

Captain Pease was a member of the Oregon State Pilots' Association. He ran boats on the Columbia and Willamette rivers from Astoria to Corvallis, owning several of the boats.

In the flood of 1861 Captain Pease ran his boat up and down the river, rescuing persons from the tops of trees and floating houses.

Surviving are two children—Captain A. L. Pease, of Portland, and Mrs. Hattie M. Colbert, of San Francisco; two sisters—Mrs. M. A. Warner and Mrs. H. E. Pope; two grandchildren—Dr. G. N. Pease and Captain A. L. Pease, Jr.

Funeral services will be held at 10 o'clock Friday morning from the Scottish Rite Cathedral. Interment will be in the family plot in the Oregon City Cemetery.
