"Harvest of Grim Reaper---Grandpa Sappingfield Called to His Final Rest Aged 93 Years---Was Pioneer of 1847 And One of Marion's Most Honored and Substantial Citizens--John Sappingfield, one of the oldest pioneers in Marion county died at his home on Howell Prairie, ten miles east of this city, Saturday night at 8 o'clock March 7, aged 93 years, 3 months, and 7 days.

Deceased came across the plains in 1847 and, with his wife, settled on a donation land claim on Howell Prairie, where he has resided ever since, and where he finally passed away last Saturday night.

Deceased leaves an aged widow, one daughter, Mrs. Amanda KING, of Macleay, and three sons, Henry and Chas. Sappingfield, of Pratum, and William Sappingfield, of Harrisburg.

He had led an active life, being hale and hearty, and his last sickness was very sudden, coming on very suddenly, after supper on the night of his death, and in another short hour he was no more.

The funeral service will be conducted at the family home today, Tuesday morning, at 10 o'clock, in the charge of the Rev. C. Alderson. The remains will be interred in the McCorkle cemetery." Oregon Statesman, March 10, 1903, 3:1.

"Oregon Pioneer Dies---He Was Quite Well At Supper Time--J. W. Sappingfield, one of the oldest settlers in Marion county, died at his home east of Salem Sunday, about 7 o'clock in the evening. He ate a hearty breakfast and was quite well at supper time, but two hours later had passed to the other world. He was about 90 years of age and was hale and hearty all his life. He leaves two sons at Salem, Henry and John William at Eugene and a daughter Mrs. John King at Howell. His sons George and John are dead. The funeral will be held from the home, burial at the Murphy cemetery Tuesday afternoon. Rev. Alderson will officiate."Capital Journal, March 9, 1903.

"In the death of John Sappingfield, which occurred on his farm in Waldo Hills, on March 8, 1903, Silverton Country lost one of its oldest and most highly esteemed pioneer inhabitants. He died at the age of 93 years.

Mr. Sappingfield was born in Davis County, North Carolina, Nov. 25, 1809. When he was a year old his parents, George and Catherine Sappingfield, moved to southern Indiana, settling in Harrison County, where they lived on a farm. About 1833, they moved to Iowa. In 1847, they moved to Davis County, Iowa and took up a tract of land under the Homestead laws of the country.

John Sappingfield remained with his family until the move to Iowa when he started out on his own. On May 27, 1838, he married Mary Hagey, a native of his own county in N.C.

In 1847, they started across the plains with 2 wagons, 3 yoke of oxen for each wagon, accompanied by their family of 3 children. After a long and wearisome journey of six months they arrived in Marion County. Mr. Sappingfield rented some land on the old Edmundson claim. Later he purchased the right to a donation claim located about 8 miles east of Salem. In the spring of 1848, he erected a one room log cabin. Later he built improvements on the land and spent the rest of his life on that farm.

From time to time he accumulated more land, much of it in timber. He cleared the land making his farm one of the finest and most productive pieces of property in Marion County.

Their union was blessed with the following children: William, Louisa, George, Amanda, wife of J.T. King; John W., Henry A., and Charles Sappingfield.” [Silverton Appeal, Silverton, OR March 1903]

The Late William Sappingfield.

GOLDENDALE, Wash., Aug. 2. —(Special.) — William Sappingfield, who died here July 28, was born near Burlington, Ia., April 26, 1830. In 1847, with his parents, he crossed the plains by ox team, settling near Salem, Or. In his early manhood he spent five years mining in California, Idaho, and Montana. Later he purchased a farm near Silverton, where he resided for 30 years. In 1892 he moved to Eugene, and in 1903 came to Klickitat County.

In 1886 he married Frances W. Looney, of Jefferson, Or. Four children were born, of whom two are living, Willard B. Sappingfield and Mrs. Delbert Gunning, both of this city. Besides his immediate family, he leaves a mother, aged 92, residing in Salem, Or.

"JOHN SAPPINGFIELD. In the death of John Sappingfield, which occurred on his farm eight miles east of Salem, March 8, 1903, Marion county lost one of its oldest and most highly esteemed pioneer inhabitants. Mr. Sappingfield was born in Davis county, N. C., November 25, 1809, when even the eastern states were in their infancy, and at a period when the great " Oregon country " was a wilderness practically unknown to the civilized world. When he was a year old his parents, George and Catherine (Myers) Sappingfield, moved to southern Indiana, then regarded as far " out west," settling in Harrison county, where they lived upon a farm most of the time. In the course of time they removed to Parke county, that state, and about 1833 moved still further westward into Iowa. In the latter state they devoted, their energies to farming in Des Moines and Monroe counties until 1847, when they removed to Davis county and took up a tract of land under the homestead laws of the country.

John Sappingfield had remained with the family in their various locations until they decided to settle in Davis county, Iowa, when he determined to seek his own fortune independently. May 27, 1838, he married Mary Hagey, a native of the same county in North Carolina which witnessed his own birth, and who had been brought by her parents to Des Moines county, Iowa. The young people felt the spirit of their fathers strongly exercised within themselves, and when the parents of Mr.

Sappingfield finally decided to make Davis county their home, he and his bride concluded to seek an improvement in their fortunes in the great northwest, of whose wonderful resources they had heard so many tales from the lips of travelers who had visited Oregon Territory.

With their hearts fired by a most laudable ambition, they therefore set forth, in 1847, leaving the associations of their childhood and youth behind them, but with their minds fully made up to brave any and all dangers which might confront them, and to remain true to their purpose of assisting in laying the foundation of a great commonwealth in the land beyond the mountains. They started across the plains with two wagons, three yoke of oxen to each, accompanied by their family of three children, following the trail known in those days as the " middle route." After a long and wearisome journeys of six months they arrived in Oregon, coming at once to Marion county, the destination of many of the far-seeing farmers who had emigrated from the east. Here Mr. Sappingfield almost immediately rented some land on the old Edmundson claim. This was in the fall of 1847. Subsequently he purchased the right to a donation claim located about eight miles east of Salem, which he regarded as the most fertile of the available land in the county. In the spring of 1848. he erected on this property a log house of one room, its site being the same plot of ground where he afterward built one of the most commodious homes of the day. Without any unnecessary delay he began the improvement of the land, and in the fall of that year brought his family to their new home, where he spent the remainder of his life.

From time to time Mr. Sappingfield was able, with the accumulation of years, to increase his landed possessions. His first step in this direction consisted of taking up six hundred and forty acres, about eighty acres of which was in prairie and the remainder in timber and small brush. To clear this land and prepare it for the fruits of the harvest time presented a herculean task, but it was not gigantic enough to daunt the sturdy and determined owner, who at once applied himself to the work with energy. During the years he devoted himself to the undertaking, he succeeded in making it one of the finest and most productive pieces of property in Marion county, and, indeed, in the entire Willamette valley. At the time of his death Mr. Sappingfield was the possessor of three hundred and twenty acres of the original donation claim, upon which they settled in 1848, and on which lie erected three substantial houses. To his honor it is to be said that he assisted materially in the construction of nearly all the roads in the neighborhood of his home.

Side by side with this venerable man stood his equally faithful wife, now in her eighty-fourth year, the couple forming, during the latter years of their lives together, almost the last link with a historic and romantic past. Their long and useful life together was peculiarly blessed. They accumulated an abundance of worldly goods and innumerable friends, and their recollections of more than a half century of life in the northwest enriched every passing day. Their union has been blessed with the following children: William, a prominent resident of the state of Washington; Louisa, deceased; George, deceased; Amanda, wife of J. T. King, a resident of Marion county ; John W., deceased ; Henry A., a farmer of Marion county; and Charles. The last-named son married Mary E. Given, in September, 1892, and the young couple make their home on the farm occupied for so many years by their parents, the same having been given over to their management.

Thus is told, though necessarily in brief outline, the story of the career of one of the worthy founders of the empire of the northwest. His business sagacity, his integrity of character, and his splendid personality, supplemented by his appreciation of the early possibilities of this region of the country, render his record one that will endure as a monument to the important part he bore in the development of one of the most favored agricultural localities in the whole world. [Portrait and Biographical Record of the Willamette Valley p. 498-501]

A GOOD SAMARITAN OF '49

A company of rough miners sat around their campfire at Shasta Soda Springs, one day in 1849, discussing what to do with a certain lad of 18 years, a member of their party, who had been ill of fever for several days and had given out at this place and was unable to proceed further. The boy's illness had retarded their progress very much already and caused them much apprehension. The miners were greatly alarmed by various reports concerning the warlike attitude of the Indians throughout the Siskiyou and Callapooia mountains to remain longer at this place but were anxious to hurry on and join a larger party of miners camped on Shasta plains, bound for the Willamette Valley, in order to put up a better defense against the Indians.

In their discussion what to do with the patient, who had been such a handicap to their progress, they said the fever was sure to prove fatal, like most all of the other cases they had seen, and as they expressed it, "He was a goner sure," many of them were in favor of leaving him to his fate, as they feared all might be massacred, if they waited for him to recover sufficiently to travel.

The poor chap could hear them discussing his case during intervals of consciousness, but was too weak and miserable to care. Finally one stalwart young miner rose to his feet and settled the question by refusing to leave the boy, saying, "No matter what the rest of you men do, I will stay by the boy, live or die." Several others cast their lot with the invalid, while the others hurried on to join their party.

This brave, good man, with the assistance of one Owen Bush, who had waited with him, made a litter from two poles and a blanket and fastened this between two horses, tandem fashion and thus they carried the fever-stricken boy over the Siskiyou, Klamath and Callapooia mountains and delivered him, with the $4000 in gold dust the boy had mined, to his parents, who met him near the present city of Eugene, Oregon. This lad was George W. Hunt, the writer's father.

The journey was slow and tedious, the danger from Indians was great and we wonder if the descendants of John Sappingfield, the pioneers of east Howell prairie, in Marion county, Oregon, know what a sacrifice this good man made for a mere boy who had no claim upon him other than that wayfarer on the Jericho road had upon the Man of Samaria we read of in sacred writ.
