TO THE BOARD OF MANAGEMENT:

Gentlemen, It is my painful task to make you acquainted with a horrid massacre which took place yesterday at Waiilatpu, about which I was first apprised early this morning by an American who had escaped, of the name of Hall, and who reached this half naked and covered with blood. As he started at the onset, the information I obtained was not satisfactory. He, however, assured me that the Doctor and another man were killed, but could not tell me the persons who did it, and how it originated....

Besides three that were wounded, more or less, Messrs. Hall, Kemble and another whose name I cannot learn. W. McB." [Oregon Spectator, Dec 10, 1847].

“Gertrude Hall Denny (1837-1933) by E. Adaline Darling--
[published in With Her Own Wings p.129-132]

I had suffered a disrupted home and was walking the streets of Portland, Oregon, looking for a room. My meagre funds needed careful handling, and I began my search in Goose Hollow but without results. After I had walked miles, some inner urge prompted me to turn toward the Heights.

As night was falling, I passed the kitchen window of a spacious home, and there, as in a frame, was the kindly face I have cause to remember forever.

As the woman opened the kitchen door to my knock she said, ‘How do you do, my dear? I should remember your name. I’ve seen you often at lectures, I’m sure.’

‘Why, you are Mrs. Denny! I didn’t even know where you lived, but when I saw you in the window I was sure you would let me come in and rest. I’m very tired,’ I faltered.

Two arms held me for a moment. She must have discerned my need for she said quickly, ‘You have come to the right place, child,’ and led me to a chair.

When I told her how I had spent the day, she exclaimed, 'I have just the room for you. I was vacated this morning!'

Her home was a haven for business girls; there were cooking arrangements in the spacious basement. In the days which followed she often stood at the head of those stairs with something she had saved from the evening meal for me on my return from work or from study evenings.

I was happy there for eight years. On the floor above me were Henrietta McKaughn, a journalist, and a Miss Holt, a city school teacher. We three became kindred spirits in our love for and appreciation of the Emersonian mind of Mrs. Denny, our landlady.

I have not questioned why I was favored, but I know her versatile personality led me to understand her humanitarian outlook on life.

Though only ten years of age she, Gertrude Hall, was the oldest of five daughters who came west by wagon train with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Hall of Illinois. They were with the group of sixty-nine men, women and children whom the Whitmans were sheltering at the time of the terrible Whitman massacre of November, 1847.

She told me she saw Chief Tiloukete trying to tomahawk Dr. Whitman when he was crawling from house to house giving warning after he was shot. She believed her father had started for aid as his body when found had been washed up by the river. He had been scalped.

Mrs. Denny did not reiterate those past horrors. 'It is all a hideous blur of trying to hide the children and at the same time stay near my mother,' she said. 'I now think the dreadful conflict was partly instigated by diverse religious beliefs at a time when sickness and death were rampant, and the savages became actors in the bloody warfare.'

Thus Gertrude Hall, at ten years, was tragically initiated into the worst of pioneering, and later memories of her mother's homesteading and raising the children in the Willamette valley seemed a happy, though gradual, easing up of hardships.

'Those were the days when people stood together in helpfulness, and hard work was the common lot of all. My life was one of baby tending and of learning to prepare, tastily, the common foods which could be obtained.'

When sixteen years of age she married a Captain White who was a river steam-boat captain. One daughter, grandchildren and great grandchildren from this marriage survived her.

On December 23, 1868, she became the bride of Judge Owen N. Denny, a brilliant figure in Portland history who became of national importance.

Mrs. Denny's modest but interesting descriptions of their colorful years of life together remain with me as testimony to genuineness and an innately democratic outlook on life.

I discerned, too, the great part she played in the merited high regard which Li Hung Chang held for the couple while they were in Tientsin. Judge Denny was Consul General at Shanghai for four years.

Then there was the interesting friendship with General Grant and his wife whom they accompanied on a trip around the world from Tientsin back to Yokohama.

Gertrude Denny's engaging personality attracted many favors including gifts from the Queen of Korea. During Judge Denny's position as advisor to the King, their home in Korea was furnished with these useful, beautiful or practical gifts. Many of them they brought back to the United States when they returned.

'The servant problem did not exist in the Orient,' she declared. 'I found the term "Heathen Chinese" was a misnomer; their honesty and morals were above the average white's.'

The energy expended by Judge Denny in the introduction of China Pheasants into the United States for their food value as well as their beauty, was of some regret to her because his health was failing, and the many trials before ultimate success with the birds were a worry to him.

I was shown the gowns she and her daughter wore at State and Royal functions in palaces of the Orient; heavy brocaded silks and velvets with numerous flounces, drop skirts and trains, garments too heavy to hold out at arm's length which made me wonder at woman's endurance.

Then there were the intricately carved furniture and bric-a-brac, drapery and wall panels hand embroidered in gold and silver thread, tiny jade and other ornamental figurines which required endless dusting. But of all the treasures, the library of wonderful books was most prized by Mrs. Denny. However, one at a time she allowed me to take the treasured volumes to my room to study.

She told me once, 'A guest of mine was beside me at a window when a man, leading a prancing stallion, passed by. I exclaimed, 'My! what a beautiful creature; his owner must be proud of him!' My guest smiled and remarked, 'The owner thinks he owns the horse, but that animal owns the owner.' This made me realize how my things were beginning to own me. I still want them to be seen and admired for the beauty and workmanship they represent, but their intrinsic value is a thing of the past to me.'

Gertrude Denny was not only an Oregon pioneer, she was a great spiritual soul. Unity among Christian Churches based on their teaching of the Fatherhood of God, she felt to be a great need of the world. 'This One Great Power it was, which brought Mr. Denny and me together,' she believed. 'We belonged together and this, our separation, will seem short when I am with him again.'

I called on my friend in 1931. Again I went to the kitchen door. Her aging eyes lighted in immediate recognition and she took me into her own room. As always she called me and my two friends of the past 'My girls,' and questioned 'Why doesn't the Great Power take me? I don't want to remain here longer. There will be another war; everything points that way. Selfishness breeds war.'

We discussed the beauty of old Gospel Hymns and Mrs. Denny remarked, 'I've always thought of our beautiful West as Beulah Land, Heaven's border land.'

Thanksgiving Day, 1947, I hiked some miles up Larch Mountain trail. The panoramic view brought to mind the words of Beulah Land, and Gertrude Hall Denny. As I stood facing the mighty Columbia, for her I sang these words loud in the surrounding stillness:

Oh Beulah Land, dear Beulah Land,
As on this mighty ledge I stand

I look beyond the river's strand
And thank you, God, for this dear land.
I view the river and shining shore—
My Oregon for ever more.

“Survivor of Massacre Dead--Was Bought From Indians For Trinkets By Peter Skene Ogden

PORTLAND, Ore, Aug- 5.—(AP)

—The last survivor of the Whitman massacre, Mrs. O. Gertrude Jane Denny, 96, died at her home here today. She was the Widow of Judge Owen N. Denny of Portland and had been seriously ill since June. For many years Mrs. Denny has been active in affairs of pioneer groups, and five years ago when she was 91, she was named queen mother of the Oregon pioneers. She was one of the last links with the early history of the states. She was born at Ten-Mile Run, New Jersey, in 1837 and with her parents, Peter Hall and Eliza Hall, came to the Oregon country in 1847. Her mind, -even in the last few years was exceedingly alert and Mrs. Denny was able to tell graphically of her experiences as a ten year old girl, when her father was slain ,by the Indians in the Whitman massacre, near Walla Walla, Wash. Her mother, she and four other children were taken prisoners by the Redmen. A month later Peter Skene Ogden, head of Hudson's Bay company, bought the prisoners from the indians for -blankets, hatchets and trinkets. “ [Ogden Standard Examiner Aug 6, 1933 p.2]

“Northwest Pioneer Dies—Woman Escaped an Indian Massacre in 1847—

PORTLAND. Ore. (UP).

On Nov. 29, 1847, a band of blood thirsty Cayuse Indians swooped down upon the little Whitman mission on the River of The West, and in the most terrible massacre in the history of the Pacific northwest occurred. A handful of prisoners were taken, the remainder, including the immortal Dr. Marcus Whitman, were slain. The last of that little handful died Saturday.

She was Mrs. Gertrude Jane Denny, 96, who as a girl of 10, went thru the horrors of the famous Whitman massacre, and was held prisoner for a month by the vengeful and treacherous Cayuse's. Her father and mother, Mrs. and Mrs. Peter Hall of New Jersey crossed the plains and arrived at the Whitman mission, near what is now Walla Walla, Wash, in the early fall of 1847. Hall was one of those slain, and Mrs. Hall and her five children were taken prisoners. They were "bought"" from the Indians a month later by Peter Skene Ogden of the Hudson's company

In 1877 Mrs Denny, with her husband, the late Judge Owen Denny, went to China where Judge Denny was United States consul-general from 1877 to 1884. Judge Denny was attracted by the beautiful ring necked Chinese pheasants and shipped some of them to Oregon. Not until the third shipment was made did the birds begin to multiply on the western continent, but today the Chinese pheasant is the principal game bird of the region and has been planted over most of the country.” [The Lincoln Star, Lincoln, NE August 6, 1933 p.2]

“Capt. Leonard White was one of the first men in Oregon to devote himself to the navigation of its rivers. He possessed the rare faculty of successfully piloting a steamer in unsurveyed channels, and commenced running steamboats on the Willamette River in the early fifties, at which time the head of navigation was at Albany. He was not content to let it long remain so, however, and took his steamer to Corvallis without any difficulty, meeting with a grand reception on his arrival. The authorities presented him with a block of land in the city and were lavish in their promises of business. From that time river transportation to Corvallis was assured to the people of the town and country roundabout. Captain White determined to try the stream still farther up, though from this point it was rather narrow, crooked, rapid, and encumbered with driftwood and logs. Undismayed by these obstructions he took the steamer Phenix as far as Harrisburg in the fall of 1855. He remained on this steamer until the autumn of 1856, when he went to the Canemah, running her to Harrisburg, and was afterward pilot on the Clinton, which he took as far as Eugene on her initial trip to that point. He commanded different boats on the Willamette until late in 1858, when he was engaged as captain of the new steamer Colonel Wright on the upper river, named in honor of Colonel Wright of the United States Army, who was at that time was superior officer of a military post at The Dalles. Captain White took the steamer up the Snake River as far as Lewiston, and was the first man to make a landing there. In the summer of 1863 he ran another steamer called the Cayuse above Lewiston, going as far as the mouth of the Grand Ronde River. In 1865 he opened navigation farther north and east on the Columbia than ever before. The pioneer craft in these waters was the steamer Forty-nine, which he operated until his health failed, and toward the close of 1869 he went to San Francisco in the hope of regaining his accustomed vigor. Not obtaining relief he returned to Portland in 1870, and died in the early spring of that year. As a pathfinder in the unexplored waters of the Northwest, Captain White won for himself a lasting name in the annals of steam boating (see also steamer Forty-nine, 1865).” [The Oregon Steam Navigation Company, Growth of British Columbia Marine Industries p. 81]

OHSQ: Vol IV p.259-260 Mrs. Rebecca Hall Cone Hopkins Reminiscences—“Mrs. Hopkins, the daughter of Mr. Peter D. Hall, who perished near Fort Walla Walla-Wallula—after escaping from the Whitman massacre, is now living on the farm held by her first husband, Philander J. Cone. Although past the age of fifty she is in good health, of prepossessing appearance, and of very active habits. Her cozy farm home, which is on the prairie, but at the edge of the grove, and shaded by some oak trees in the dooryard, is ornamented also with choice varieties of flowers, especially of roses, of which she had many rare kinds.

She was but five (sic) years of age when the massacre occurred; and by the terror of that event all previous recollections seem to have been completely obliterated. She does not remember anything of her father; but of the massacre itself, so far as her own observation went, she still has a vivid picture in her mind. She recalls the upstairs room where the women and children were huddled together after Whitman was struck down and where Mrs. Whitman came after she was shot in the breast. Mrs. Whitman, she says, was standing, when wounded, at a window, and was washing the blood from her hands, as she had been dressing the wounds of her husband. Mrs. Hall was with her. It could not have been apprehended that further murders would be committed, and Mrs. Whitman must have been the equal object of the Indians superstitious rage, as she was the only woman killed.

Mrs. Hopkins remembers the appearance of the upstairs room, and that the Indians were kept back from coming up for a time by an old gun, which was probably not loaded, but was laid so as to point across the stairway. The savages would come to the stairway until within sight of this gun barrel, and then afraid, or pretending to be afraid, of its fire would scamper back. Mr. Rogers (sic) was with the women and children.

As to the death of her father, who escaped and sought safety at old Fort Walla Walla, on the bank of the Columbia River, but was refused admission, Mrs. Hopkins believes he was killed near the fort. By Mr. Osborne, who with his family, finally reached the fort, the clothes of Hall were seen and recognized. It was said to him when he exclaimed, ‘those are Hall’s clothes’, that Hall had been drowned in attempting to cross the Columbia.

Mrs. Hopkins considers the account of the massacre as given in the June number of the Native Son (1899), which was furnished by Mrs. O.N. Denny, as the most accurate that she has seen, Mrs. Denny, Mrs. Hopkin's older sister, who was about twelve years old at the time of the tragedy, has a comprehensive recollection of the whole affair."

Mrs. Rebecca Hall Hopkins Passes Away at Nashville.

Mrs. Rebecca Hall Hopkins, a pioneer of 1847, and one of the survivors of the Whitman massacre of November 29 and 30, 1847, at Wallatpu, six miles west of the present City of Walla Walla, Wash., died last Sunday at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Maud Johnston, at Nashville, on the Mount Scott line.

Mrs. Hopkins was born in Illinois on March 24, 1844, and came across the plains with her parents, Peter B. Hall and wife, arriving at the Whitman Mission early in November of that year. Her father was one of the 14 who lost his life by the massacre alluded to. The remaining persons at the mission numbered 53, and all were rescued from captivity by the Indians by Peter Svane Ogden, who at that time was the chief factor of the Hudson's Bay Company at Vancouver. The widowed mother and her five little girls, of whom Mrs. Hopkins was next to the youngest, with the other survivors, two of whom now reside in Portland—Mrs. O. N. Denny, the oldest of the Hall children, and Mrs. Nancy Osborn Jacobs—were taken down the Columbia River and arrived at Oregon City on January 10, 1848.

On August 2, 1860, Mrs. Hopkins was married to Philander Johnson Cone, with whom she lived until his death on October 11, 1890. On February 20, 1892, she was married to R. H. Hopkins, who died a few years ago.
