FUNERAL OF
OREGON PIONEER
OF 1850 TODAY.

FREDERICK FLOREY

FOREST GROVE, Or., March 31.
—Frederick Florey, the Oregon pioneer of 1850, who died at Wapato yesterday, will be buried in the Almorán cemetery tomorrow. Mr. Florey was aged 77 years. In 1833 he was married to Miss Elizabeth Doty. He left a wife and the following children: Henrietta, Alfred, Mrs. Jenette Steventon and Mrs. Elizabeth Erph, of Wapato; Frederick and Charles Florey, of Portland.

[Oregonian, Portland, Oregon, Tuesday, April 1, 1902 p.4]

Within a week the death of three pioneer women of advanced age has been noted in this vicinity viz., Mrs. Martha Gilmore, of The Dalles, aged 90, a pioneer of '43; Mrs. Elizabeth Florey, of Wapato Station, Washington County, who was born in the then Oregon Country, at old Fort Hall, 70 years ago, and Mrs. Rebecca Ann Bingham, who has lived in the Pacific Northwest since 1870, at the great age of 96 years. The first-named of these women was the mother of ten and the second of twelve children, showing that the "old-fashioned family" was indigenous to Oregon in the early days. The record also shows, however, as do the records of all pioneer communities, that more children were born than conditions of life warranted, since of the ten children but six, and of the twelve but five, survive their respective mothers.

"W. G. FLETT, a farmer and stockman, eight miles south from Olex, was born in Washington county, Oregon, on September 25, 1842. His father, David Flett, was born in Manitoba, in 1818, and was employed by the Hudson's Bay Company. Under their direction, in 1841, being induced by the promises of Sir George Simpson, one of the formers of the company, he came with an expedition of emigrants to settle on the Pacific coast. The company consisted of eighty-two persons which left Selkirk settlement, Manitoba, on May 20, 1841. They traveled up the Saskatchewan to its head, crossed the Rockies at either Yellowhead or Arrowhead passes, thence they came through the Kootenai country to Fort Colville and from there, continued their journey through the Spokane country to Fort Wallula in time to see the fort burned by Cayuse Indians. They journeyed thence to Vancouver, some of the party going down the Columbia river and the balance fetching the horses. When they reached the Cascades, they were met by Sir George Simpson saying that he could not comply with his agreement to furnish a certain number of cows, sheep and farming implements and a year's provision but promised to furnish some things if they settled north of the Columbia river. They went to Puget sound and spent the winter of 1841-42 at Fort Nesqually. In the spring, a portion of them, including Mr. Flett, moved to Tualitan plains where he died in 1843. Mr. Flett had married Miss Letitia Cook, who was born in the Selkirk Settlement, Manitoba, in 1820. Her father, William H. Cook, was born in England and came to the Selkirk settlement in 1810 and conducted a mercantile establishment there for the Hudson's Bay Company until 1846. He was chief factor of that post. Mr. and Mrs.. Flett were married in 1840 and she died in 1857, at Newburg, Yamhill county. Our subject's father died when this lad was but three years old. The widowed mother then moved to Wapato lake where she married J. B. Rogers, in the spring of 1846. Then they moved to where Newburg is now located and bought a farm and there our subject grew up and was educated. In 1857 the mother died and our subject was made the ward of his imcle, John Flett, who apprenticed him to John W. Cullins to learn the harness maker's trade in Portland. Owing to the failure of the firm he was released and accompanied his uncle to Fort Nesqually where he worked for the Hudson's Bay Company under chief factor Huggins for a year. Then we see him in the Willamette valley working at the saddler's trade for wages until 1861, after which he came east of the Cascades and rode the range for Senator Ankeny and later purchased Indian ponies, running a pack train to Canyon City and in March, 1863, the Indians stole the entire train at Shaniko. He purchased more horses and packed for another season to Boise, then returned to the Willamette valley and engaged in the manufacture of saddles. In April, 1870, he took a preemption near where he now resides. Later he took other claims and bought more land until he is now farming nearly three sections. He has been farming and stock raising, handling cattle, until recently. Now he devotes his time to raising hogs and general farming. He has a couple of hundred head and expects to increase the number soon. Mr. Flett is well known all through the country and highly esteemed, both as a pioneer and a substantial man.

In 1872, Mr. Flett married Miss Lydia Doughty, who was born in Yamhill county, Oregon, on December 23, 1853. Her father, William Doughty, was born in Knoxville, Tennessee, in 1810. He came west in the employ of the American Fur Company in 1837 and four years later journeyed on to the Willamette valley where he died in 1871. He had married Miss Mary Doughty, who was born in 1815. To Mr. and Mrs. Flett the following children have been born, Mrs. Dona Clark, Mrs. Stella Clark. Rube, John, William, Fannie, Maude, Elda, Frank, Florence, and Arthur McKinley, all living. Mr. Flett has one' half-sister, Anna Rogers. In politics, he is a strong Republican, having held these principles all his life. He is narrowed to no particular denomination but supports them all liberally. He also labors zealously for the advancement of educational interests and is a highly esteemed citizen. Mr. Flett has done considerable work for the government officers in locating Indians on land and has won their confidence and esteem. He is a genuine westerner, generous, hospitable and brave.

It is of interest to know that when the Red River expedition was at the Cascade fort, their captain, James Sinclair, was killed by the Indians. The fort was besieged by savages and the first shot fired killed Captain Sinclair. Grant and Sheridan were there at that time." [An Illustrated History of Central Oregon p. 588-9]
