JAMES D. SCOTT SHOOTS HIMSELF

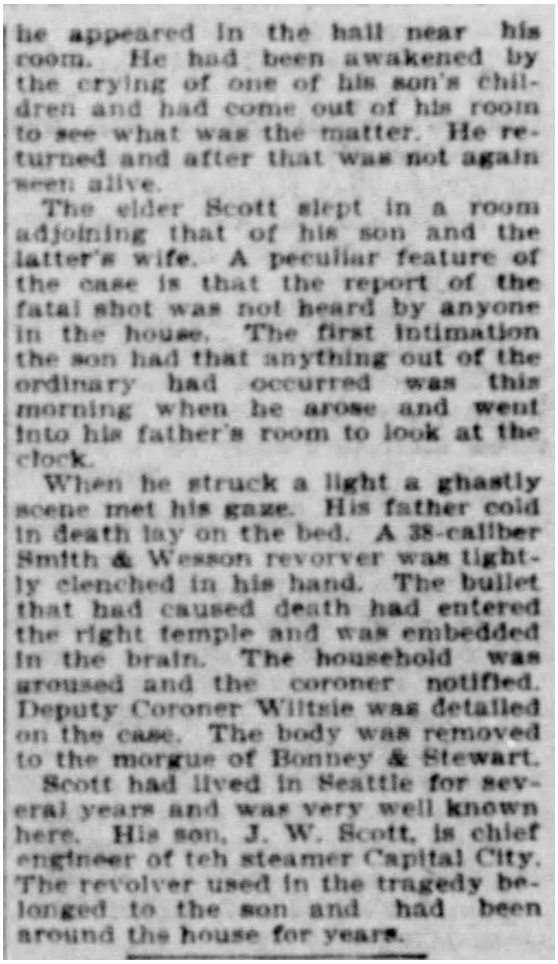

Old Resident Takes His Own Life in a Fit of Despondency--- Was an Invalid

A revolver tightly clenched in his right hand and a bullet hole in his temple this morning told the route James D. Scott, 68 years old, had taken to the grave. When he was found by his son, J. W. Scott, of 508 Twenty-eighth avenue south, he was dead in his bed. Sometime between 10 o'clock last night and 6 o'clock this morning he had committed suicide.

For several years Scott had lived with his son and daughter-in-law. He had never hinted at suicide, but of late had been a trifle despondent on account of illness.

It is the belief of his relatives that he had grown tired of a life of suffering and pain and to end all killed himself. He had been afflicted with a disease of the air passages for some years and lately had been suffering with acute neuralgia. The latter complaint had given him a great deal of pain.

The last time Scott was seen alive was at 10 o'clock last night, when he appeared in the hall near his room. He had been awakened by the crying of one of his son's children and had come out of his room to see what was the matter. He returned and after that was not again seen alive.

The elder Scott slept in a room adjoining that of his son and the latter's wife. A peculiar feature of the case is that the report of the fatal shot was not heard by anyone in the house. The first intimation the son had that anything out of the ordinary had occurred was this morning when he arose and went into his father's room to look at the clock.

When he struck a light a ghastly scene met his gaze. His father cold in death lay on the bed. A 38-caliber Smith & Wesson revorver was tightly clenched in his hand. The bullet that had caused death had entered the right temple and was embedded in the brain. The household was aroused and the coroner notified. Deputy Coroner Wiltsie was detailed on the case. The body was removed to the morgue of Bonney & Stewart.

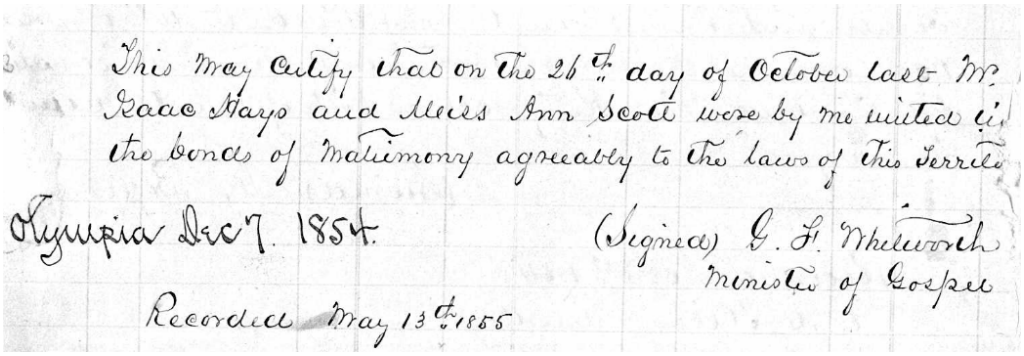

Scott had lived in Seattle for several years and was very well known here. His son, J. W. Scott, is chief engineer of teh steamer Capital City. The revolver used in the tragedy belonged to the son and had been around the house for years.
